

Cities In the Future

Cities are facing problems of overpopulation. If we don't find solutions soon, there will be serious consequences like pollution, congested transports, poverty, unemployment and segregation. Natural areas will become more fragmented and climate change will cause rising sea level, polar ice cap melting and the air will become unbreathable. Fortunately, cities are trying to find solution through urban planning.